

1000 WHENEVER Minutes® FOR JUST $39.99 a month

3.30pm

Iceland and Australia top happiness poll

Roger Maynard in Sydney
Wednesday June 28, 2006

The Guardian

Search this site

Go

Go to...

Special report: Australia

Australia archive

In this section

Out but not down - Aussies' huge turnout to cheer the Soccerroos

Kidman stars in Australia's royal wedding

Hecklers greet Murdoch award

All eyes down under for a 'royal' wedding

The land of the dead

Death rate is three times higher among Aboriginal children

Australians take riskier role in Iraq

Bleak picture of Aboriginal life expectancy

Kidman to wed singer Urban in Sydney

Handover to Iraqi forces begins

Descendants of Bounty mutineers in new struggle

How our earliest relatives made a home on the rocks

Forget Asbos. Australia uses Barry Manilow

Australians – the second-happiest people in the world. Photograph: Christof Koepsel/Getty Images

They are as different as two countries can be: one big, the other small; one hot, the other cold; and at opposite ends of the world from each other. But if it's happiness you're after, Iceland and Australia are the best places to live in the world.

A new study that seeks to go beyond the simple measure of GDP and gauge more subtle aspects of wellbeing such as life-expectancy, education and living standards, puts Iceland top of the international happiness scale, with Australia a close second.

Article continues ▾

LUXURY TRAVEL AUCTIONS

Click here to bid and save!

At the bottom end, the economists Andrew Leigh, of the Australian National University, and Justin Wolfers, of Wharton University, Pennsylvania, ranked Russians, Ukrainians, Romanians and Bulgarians as the world's most miserable.

Interestingly, happiness was not always dependent on wealth. The study showed that OECD statistics suggested relatively poor countries such as Mexico and Nigeria were happier than some developed nations. The economists decided to study national happiness quotas because they suspected a nation's GDP was not always a reliable measure for gauging well-being.

Thai government under fire for zoo trading

Fresh arrivals bolster East Timor peacekeepers

Using the Human Development Index, which combines life-expectancy, education and GDP, the researchers found that Australians were happier than most other people despite longer hours and a lower level of job satisfaction.

Dr Leigh told the Guardian that Australia's happiness could be due to several factors. "The weather could be part of it, though that flies in the face of the Iceland experience," he acknowledged. "Beyond that, economic growth and democracy also seem to play a role. We enjoy a high standard of living and places that have more sun tend to be happier."

The Australians have featured prominently in cross-national happiness surveys since the 1940s but this is the first time international research has compared such a broad range of data to reach its conclusions.

Special report

Australia

Archived articles

More on Australia

World news guide

Australia

Useful links

Australian Broadcasting Corporation

Sydney Morning Herald

The Age

Advertiser links

\$145,000 mortgage for \$484/mo

Mortgage rates are still low. Compare rates - refinance and...

lowermybills.com

Credit Cards Specials at CreditCards.com

Compare credit card offers and apply for the card of your...

creditcards.com

Get a Free Game from RealArcade

Download a free game from RealArcade. Try over 400 more...

realarcade.com

auto part | car stereo | auto detailing | auto loan | car rental

Printable version | Send it to a friend | Save story

