Justin Wolfers twists his way to first place in Sydney University's giant Twister game last Friday

IT was a case of "we must stop meeting like this" for the 400 or so Sydney University students aiming for the world's largest Twister game last Friday.

20-year-old winner Maynard F# Crabbes, resplendent in a pair of fluorescent pink underpants on his head, called the position changes while students scrambled over each other in the race for Twister games.

Winner Justin Wolfers, of Bankham Hills, attributed his performance in the 25-year-old game to "constant practice".

An official university orientation week event, the game is a great way to introduce new people to each other, according to convenor Michael Lindsay.
