

Marianne Bertrand's primary research and teaching interests are in the fields of Labor Economics, Corporate Finance, and Development Economics. She received a B.A. in Economics (1991) and M.A. in Econometrics (1992) at the Universite Libre de Bruxelles, Belgium and a Ph.D. in Economics (1998) at Harvard University. In July 1998, she joined the Princeton University Department of Economics and the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs. She is a Faculty Associate of the Industrial Relations Section and Research Program in Development Studies at Princeton University, a Faculty Research Fellow in the Labor Studies program at the National Bureau of Economic Research, and a Research Affiliate at the Centre for Economic Policy Research. She is also a consultant at the Harvard Institute for International Development at Harvard University, advising on reforms in Public Sector Undertakings in Tamil Nadu.

Her current research projects include a study of the impact of U.S. state anti-takeover legislation on managerial decision about pay, employment and investment; an examination of managerial skimming as an alternative interpretation of top executives' compensation structure; a study of the employment and productivity effects of commercial zoning in France; a study of the impact of an old-age social pension program on prime-age labor supply in South Africa; and a study of the determinants of female children neglect in India.