Our key finding is that income appears to be related across countries, but income is not the only factor that contributes to the rather consistent happiness. Unlike Americans, the Europeans and Japanese have grown happier. What are we missing when we consider that rich people and rich countries are happier in like...